To the Beloved Memory of Arthur Minden
By his wife Beatrice

PREFACE

I first met Rabbi Dr. Klein in 1974 through Beatrice Minden, wife of the late Arthur Minden. Mrs. Minden, wishing to continue her husband's legacy, decided to sponsor the publication of Dr. Klein's manuscript of the Hebrew Etymological Dictionary. She arranged for acquisition of the manuscript and its transfer to the University of Haifa for editing and finally publication.

It was thanks to the warm and generous support and sponsorship of Arthur Minden that Dr. Klein was able to devote the last ten years of his life to this monumental work. Arthur Minden also ensured the publication of Dr. Klein's earlier book, entitled A Comprehensive Etymological Dictionary of the English Language.

We are grateful to Beatrice Minden for her perseverance and support of the publication of this work.

Morris A. Gross, Q.C., Donald Carr, Q.C., and Harvey A. Shapiro have all generously given their time and skills in solving the complicated legal aspects of the project.

Most generous and gracious assistance was given by Reverend James A. Lord of Hamilton, Ontario, a dear friend to Dr. Klein.

Professor Aharon Dolgopolsky of the University of Haifa, and then Mr. Dov Benhorin, each undertook the difficult task of editing Dr. Klein's manuscript.

Eventually it was Mr. Baruch Sarel, prominent editor and translator who most ably adapted the handwritten manuscript, edited it and prepared it for press. Mr. Sarel also added over 2500 entries, mainly newly coined words and some older words which had not appeared in the original manuscript.

Mr. Ariel Vardi, one of Israel's foremost typographers, designed the book and aided us in solving the many computer related problems inherent in any work combining different languages, particularly in this case where English and Hebrew read in opposite directions.

We are especially grateful to Professor Haim Rabin of the Hebrew University and the Hebrew Language Academy. This eminent philologist gave unstintingly of his time and knowledge and provided the foreword for the book as well.

There are others not mentioned by name to whom we are indebted for their valuable help in all phases of the production of this important reference work.

To all, we express our deep appreciation.

INTRODUCTION

Ernest David Klein (1899–1983) the son of a rabbi, was born at Szatmar (Satu Mare) in Transylvania, which is now in a corner of Romania between Hungary and the Soviet Ukraine. The town changed hands several times during Klein's lifetime: from his birth until he was nineteen it was part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, where many languages were spoken, often several in one locality. Living in such a multilingual atmosphere may well have stirred his interest in languages and in their interrelationships. His formal education increased his knowledge of languages: for his Jewish education he needed to read Hebrew and Aramaic, and in school, apart from German, he studied Latin and Greek — both indispensable to an etymologist, and which he put to good use when later, in Toronto, he composed his etymological dictionary of medical terms (unpublished).

In 1920, Klein passed the examination required for becoming a rabbi, and five years later obtained his doctorate in Semitic and Romance languages at the University of Vienna. With the languages he picked up in his later migrations, he is said to have had a working knowledge of forty languages altogether.

From 1931 to 44 he was rabbi at Nove Zamky, then a Hungarian-speaking town in the Slovak eastern part of what is now Czechoslovakia. He survived the death camps of Auschwitz and Dachau, and, after the war, officiated briefly as rabbi in his home town in Romania, and in Paris. From 1951 he lived in Toronto, where he was the spiritual head of a community of Hungarian-speaking immigrants, and lived in the same building as his synagogue. In the large single-roomed attic he kept his books and compiled his three etymological dictionaries.

Since early times, humanity has tried to find out why things are called by the words that denote them; the Hebrew Bible offers quite a few instances, e.g. Genesis 2:23. The Greeks called this: finding the true meaning of the word, "true" being etymos, literally "that which is", and "etymology" meant originally "using words in their true sense". This "truth" was found by deriving existing words from other words, in the same or in another language. The first known systematic attempt to use such connections not for speculation as to the true nature of things, but in order to discover the meanings of words, was made by Jewish scholars in North Africa, Spain, and later in Southern France, between 900 and 1350 C.E. They deduced the meanings of difficult Biblical words from corresponding words in Arabic and Aramaic, applying rules for which consonants in one language corresponded to a given consonant in another. In the 18th century the same methods were employed by Dutch and German Christian scholars in Biblical research. The first full dictionary to the Bible on etymological principles was that of Wilhelm Gesenius in 1810–12. By then an important process in linguistic science had begun: the discovery of exact "laws" which connected sounds in languages belonging to the same "family", thus providing a safe scientific basis for etymological dictionaries (as opposed to bilingual dictionaries occasionally employing etymology). Etymological dictionaries were published for many of the languages of Europe, which resulted in increasing attention being paid not only to the sound-laws, but also to the establishment of rules as to which differences in meaning were admissible in comparing words. By the end of the 19th century a discipline of historical semantics had been established, which classified known changes of meaning. A great deal of research had also been done in that period on the processes of borrowing words and imitating the meaning or formation of words from other languages. Etymological dictionaries mostly list both "cognate" words of common origin and borrowed words.

The listing of etymologies and their use for establishing meanings was taken over by the first major dictionary of Hebrew throughout all periods, Thesaurus Totius Hebraitatis (Millon ha-lashon ha-ivrit) by Eliezer Ben-Yehuda, which began to appear in 1908, as well as by the later major dictionaries, particularly that by Even-Shoshan. Klein's is the first etymological dictionary in the proper sense of Hebrew as a totality, comprising both the vocabulary current in present-day Hebrew — which includes a large percentage of Biblical, Mishnaic and Rabbinic, as well as medieval words used in earlier periods but not current in today's usage. It applies the sound-laws with greater strictness and discusses cases where there are doubts or where more than one etymology has been suggested.

Before embarking upon the present Hebrew dictionary, Rabbi Klein completed and published in 1966 his Comprehensive Etymological Dictionary of the English Language (Elsevier Publishing Co., Amsterdam, London, New York). His main innovation, in comparison with other English etymological dictionaries, was that with regard to borrowed words, he not only indicated from which words in which language they were borrowed, but also provided, as far as possible, the etymology of that word within its own background. For this reason the Comprehensive Dictionary includes a fair number of etymologies of Hebrew words. The same principle is followed in his Hebrew etymology dictionary, where the "native" etymologies of English and other words borrowed by Hebrew are given.

The English Etymological Dictionary was well received by the public, and there followed at least one further printing. In Canada Klein was rewarded for his success with the prestigious "Order of Canada" and two honorary doctorates from Canadian universities.

NOTES ON USAGE

Basic form

Each entry is presented in its basic form:
noun — given in singular form (plural forms are added only when they are irregular);
adjective — given in masculine singular (except in cases where a different form is used for feminine, plural or feminine plural;
particles — given without affixes;
verb — the root is given first, followed by all existing variations (each conjugation is represented in the third person singular, past tense).

Spelling

Entries appear in traditional, accepted spelling. In some cases the author has given a reasoned opinion which contradicts the accepted form. In words accented on the penultimate syllable, the stress mark is given below the accented letter. Homonyms are given as separate entries, distinguished by consecutive Roman numerals.

Structure

Each entry begins with the Hebrew word under discussion. It is followed by the part-of-speech or the linguistic stratum from which it stems. (See below.) The various meanings of the word are numbered consecutively. The etymological information is given in square brackets, followed by the derivatives, the majority of which appear as separate entries in the dictionary.

Linguistic strata are indicated as follows:
Biblical — no indication;
Post Biblical Hebrew — PBH;
Medieval Hebrew — MH;
New Hebrew — NH;
Foreign Word — FW.

Regular brackets have three uses, apparent from their context: explanation, field, discipline or status, and translation (always with an equal sign =).

* * *

The author has made great efforts to present each term with a concise clear and specific translation. In transposing from language to language, particularly from Hebrew to English which are so different from one another, it is not always possible to find a suitable parallel. Where the author insisted on a more exact meaning, he translated literally even if the resulting form is unfamiliar in that particular context. Such words, however, are easily understood.

TRANSLITERATION RULES

TRANSLITERATION OF SEMITIC WORDS

The transliteration rules of Semitic words in this dictionary follow that of Hebrew and Arabic given below. א

א The first letter of the Hebrew alphabet. The name of the letter is 'Aleph', and so called in allusion to its ancient Heb. form, representing the head of an ox (see אֶלֶף, אַלּוּף, and cp. Akka. alpu, Arab. alif, Phoen. אלף, whence Gk. Alpha). In PBH it has the numerical value of one. א alternates with other gutterals, as with ה (see e.g. אָמוֹן, Jer. 52:15, instead of הָמוֹן), and with ע (see e.g. מְאָב, Amos 6:5, instead of מַחֲעֶבֶת). It also alternates with י (see e.g. צְבָאִים and צְבָיִים, pl. of צְבִי). For the interchangeability of א and ה see also in the conjugational system Heb. הִפְעִיל and Aram. אַפְעֵל, Heb. הִתְפַּעֵל and Aram. אִתְפַּעֵל. א is used to form secondary verbs and nouns (see e.g. אבטח, אבחן, אַבְטָחָה, אַבְחָנָה). In Aram. it also serves as the definite article (see אָ־) and as the most common subst. and adj. suff. (see ־אָא).

Nöldeke connected it with base אול (= to be in front), which is probably identical orig. with אול (= to be strong); see אול I. According to Lagarde it is a derivative of אלה (= to strive or reach after a person), hence lit. means 'He whom everyone strives to reach'. Ewald and König derive it from base אלה (= to be strong). None of these etymologies, nor any others suggested, is convincing. Related to Phoen. אל, אלן, Samaritan אל, Ugar. 'l (= the mightest god, 'El'), 'lt (= name of the wife of 'El'), Akka. ilu (= god), Arab. al-ilāt (= goddess). cp. אֵל II, אֵלָה II. cp. also the second element in יִשְׂרָאֵל.]

אֵל III pron., m. & f. these (occurring eight times in Pentateuch, always with the article, i.e. in the form הָאֵל, and once, Chron. II 20:8, without the article). [According to Kuenen and Driver אֵל would merely represent an archaic spelling of אלה, a spelling analogous to Phoen. אל. However, this would not account for the fact that this 'defective' spelling occurs in the Pentateuch only when the pron. has the article, whereas it is well understood that in such a case הָאֵלֶּה was sometimes shortened into הָאֵל.]

The name was orig. applied to the pelican as 'the water carrier', i.e. the bird that carries water in its pouch. For sense development cp. Arab. saqqā(y) (= pelican; lit.: 'water carrier'). The alternation of Portuguese alcatraz to Fren. albatros, etc. (after L. albus, 'white'), was prob. suggested by the white color of the albatross. אֱלוֹהַּ, אֱלָהַּ m.n. 1 god. 2 God. [According to some scholars אֱלוֹהַּ is a back formation from the pl. אֱלוֹהִים, this latter being the plural of אֵל' with the infix ה, which has an analogy in Heb. אַמָּהוֹת, pl. of אֵם (= mother), in Aram. אבהת, pl. of אַב (= father), שְׁמָהַת, pl. of שְׁמָא (= name), to which may be added Ugar. 'mht, pl. of 'mt (= Heb. אָמָה, 'bondwoman'), bhtm, pl. of bt (= Heb. בַּיִת, 'house'), and 'lht, pl. of 'lt (= goddess), f. of 'l (= Heb. אֵל', 'god'). Others see in אֱלוֹהַּ the orig. form from which the pl. אֱלוֹהִים was formed. The consideration of the fact that אֵל has the pl. אֵלִים, shows that the second view is surely preferable to the first. Fleischer sees in אֱלוֹהַּ the derivative of base אלה, which he connects with Arab. aliha (= he sought refuge in anxiety), whence אֱלוֹהַּ would have meant orig. 'fear', hence 'object of fear or reverence', 'the revered one'. However, Nöldeke and others are prob. right when they maintain that the verb aliha in the above sense is prob. denominated from 'ilāh (= god).]

Gk. phoreion is related to phora (= a carrying, bringing), from the stem of pherein (= to bear, carry), which is cogn. with L. ferre (of s.m.). In spite of the fact that the Septuagint renders אַפְרִיוֹן by phoreion, there are both linguistic and semantic reasons which make the derivation of אַפְרִיוֹן from Gk. phoreion very improbable. Before all, Greek words began to appear as Hebrew loan words only since the period of Hellenism, hence are of much later date than the Song of Songs; moreover, the prosthetic א in אַפְרִיוֹן is inorganic and therefore difficult to explain. On the other hand, Gk. phoreion is never used in the sense of 'canopy'. The rendering of אַפְרִיוֹן by phoreion in the Septuagint is merely due to its habit of translating Heb. words by such Gk. words as resemble the Heb. in sound, even though they are only remotely related to them in meaning.]

ה

ה The fifth letter of the Hebrew alphabet. Its name, 'He', is of uncertain origin. In PBH it has the numerical value five. ה often alternates with other gutturals, as with א (see the introductory entry to letter א), and with ח if it corresponds to Arab. ḥ (see introductory entry to letter ח). Heb. ה corresponds to Akka. א; cp. e.g. Heb. הָלַךְ (= he went) with Akka. 'alāku (= to go). Rarely Heb. א corresponds to Akka. sh: cp. הוּא (= he), הִיא (= she), with Akka. shū, resp. shī. For the interchangeability of the gutturals cp. also in the conjugational system Heb. הִפְעִיל, BAram. הַפְעֵל, Aram. אַפְעֵל, Arab. 'af'ala, OSArab. הפעלה. In ע״ו stems sometimes secondary forms develop with the change of ו to ה. cp. מהל, a secondary form of מול (= to circumcise), נהר (= to shine), which is related to נור (= to shine). cp. also the bases כהן and כהל, קהל and קול, Heb. בוש and Aram.-Syr. בְּהַת (= he was ashamed), Heb. רוץ (= to run) and Aram. רְהַט, Syr. רְהַט (= he ran), Heb. דור (= generation, period, age) and Arab. dahr (= long time, age), Heb. נהק (= to yawn) and Syr. פָּק, Arab. fāqa (= he sighed).]

הַ־, הָ־, הֶ־ def. art. the (usually הַ־, with the doubling of the next letter, as in הַבַּיִת; הָ־ before the letters ר, ע, ח, ה, א, as in הָאָדָם; הֶ־ before an accented עָ, חָ, הָ, אָ, as in הֶחָכָם). [Related to Moabite and Phoen. ה. According to Brockelmann, the doubling of the next letter is due to the compensation of the shortened vowel; he compares הַמָּה, shortened form of מָה (= what). This shows the Ungnad was wrong in assuming that the Heb. art. derives from the form han. The supposition that the Heb. art. developed from hal had been given up by most Sem. scholars long ago.]

הַ־, הָ־, הֶ־ interrogative particle. Its basic form is הֲ־, as in הֲשֹׁמֵר אָחִי אָנֹכִי (Gen. 4:9); before not 'kamatzed' letters ר, ע, ח, ה, א and before letters vowelled with 'shwa' it changes into הֲ־, as in הַאֵלֵךְ (Ezek. 2:7); before unaccented עָ, חָ, הָ, אָ it changes into הֶ־, as in הֶהָשֵׁב אָשִׁיב אֶת בִּנְךָ (Gen. 24:5). [cp. BAram. and Talmudic אֵם and Arab. 'a-. cp. also הֵכִי.]

־ָה f. the most common f. subst. and adj. suff. cp. e.g. סוּסָה (= mare) from סוּס (= horse); גְּדוֹלָה, f. of גָּדוֹל (= great). This suff. developed from ־ָת, which had perhaps orig. a demonstrative force, and it became ־ָה orig. only in pause. Later, however, the form ־ָה penetrated also into context in the form of the absolute state. The form ־ַת remained in the construction state (which can never appear in pausal position) and before pron. suffixes. All this applies also to Aramaic and Arabic. cp. suff. ־ָתִי. See suffixes ־ַת, ־ָת — collateral forms of ־ָה.

־ָה״ suff. serving to form nomina unitatis (nouns of individuality). cp. e.g. אֶבְרָה (= pinion), from אֵבֶר (= pinions); אֳנִיָּה (= ship), from אֳנִי (= fleet); נְצָה (= blossom, flower), from נֵץ (= collectively); שִׁירָה (= song, ode), from שִׁיר (collectively); שִׁמְשָׁה (= sun disk), prob. from שֶׁמֶשׁ (= sun); שְׂעָרָה (= a single hair), from שֵׂעָר (= hair). [Orig. and formally identical with ־ָה׳. cp. Arab. ḥamāmaʰ (= one dove), from ḥamām (= doves); dhahabaʰ (= a piece of gold), from dhahab (= gold).]

־ָה״׳ f. collective suff. [In most cases suff. of the f. part., used substantively in a collective sense (see אוֹרְחָה and גּוֹלָה). In some other cases as in דָּגָה (= fish, coll.) and in אַרְנָה (= cedar panel), formed from a noun. In both cases, orig. and formally identical with ־ָה׳.]

ו

ו The sixth letter of the Hebrew alphabet. The name of this letter 'Waw', means 'hook', 'peg' (see וָו); so called in allusion to the ancient Heb. form of this letter. In PBH it has the numerical value six. At the beginning of West Sem. words (i.e. Heb., Aram., Ugar.), ו almost always becomes י. cp. e.g. Arab. walada, Heb. יָלַד, Aram. יְלַד (= he begot), or Ethiop. warḥ, Heb. יֶרַח, Aram. יַרְחָא (= month). cp. also the introductory entries to letters י and ה.

וְ conj. (waw copulative) and, but, therefore. 2 as, since, seeing, while, whereas, although; usually in circumstantial clauses as in וְהוּא יוֹשֵׁב (= as he sat... Gen. 18:1) and in וְהוּא הַצָּעִיר (= although he was the younger... Gen. 48:14). Before a labial (i.e. any of the sounds ב, ו, מ, פ) and before a sound with a shwa, it becomes וּ, e.g. וּמִי (= and who), וּדְבַר (= and the word of). With following י it coalesces into וִי, e.g. וִיהִי (= and let him be). Before an accented syllable it often becomes וָ, e.g. וָחֹרֶף (= and winter). Before a letter with ḥataph it takes the vowel of the ḥataph, e.g. וַאֲנָשִׁים (= and men), וֶאֱמֶת (= and truth), וָאֳנִיָּה (= and a ship). Before אֱלֹהִים it becomes וֶ. [Related to Aram., Syr. and Phoen. ו, Arab. wa, Ethiop. w-, Akka. u-.]

וְ conj. (waw consecutive, also waw conversive) 1 turns the future tense into past tense. With verbs in the second person and third person sing., and in all the three persons plu., it always has the form וְ־, as in וְתֹאמַר (= and you said). With a verb standing in the first person sing. it has the form וָ־, as in וָאֹמַר (= and I said). 2 turns the past tense into future tense. It may have the form וְ־, וּ־, וֵ־, וַ־, e.g. וְאָמַרְתִּי (= and I will say), וּבֵרַכְתָּ (= and you will bless), וְהָיִיתֶם (= and you will be), וַאֲכַלְתֶּם (= and you will eat).

In PBH כ has the numerical value of twenty, and ך has the numerical value of five hundred. כ alternates with ג (see the introductory article to letter ג) and with ק; cp. e.g. קוֹנָע, secondary form of כוֹנָע (= helmet), and כשׁט, a collateral base of קשׁט (= to make straight, to arrange, to adorn, decorate, ornament, embellish). Before the Tetragrammaton it becomes כַּ, before אֱלֹקִים it becomes כְּ. (cp. the prefixes בְּ and לְ, which undergo changes similar to those of כְּ.)
